

Education in Emergencies: Resilience, Social Cohesion and Peace

Friday, 21 June 2019, 2pm
Wolfson College, Linton Road, Oxford

At Mokoro's next seminar, we look forward to exploring education in emergency and humanitarian contexts, focusing on resilience, as well as social cohesion and the intersection with peace and conflict.

Conflicts, natural disasters, and the large-scale forced migration that often results, raise the question of how those affected by such events - particularly children - can continue to receive the education that will help them thrive in life and achieve their potential. In emergencies and humanitarian crises, education is often the first service interrupted and the last resumed¹, and the issues surrounding its provision affect those on the move as well as the communities that come to host them, raising provocative questions on how the opposing states of peace and conflict affect and influence social cohesion.

Bringing together a varied group of practitioners and researchers working at the forefront of this challenging sector, this seminar will delve into these issues through examination of specific case studies, as well as consideration of some of the broader developments in the field.

OUR SPEAKERS & CHAIR

Bios of our speakers and chair can be found on the next page.

Allison Anderson
Brookings Institution

Hiba Salem
University of Cambridge

Marie Tamagnan
Save the Children

Muriel Visser
Mokoro

A photograph showing a group of people seated in rows of wooden chairs, attending a seminar. The image is slightly blurred.

1:30pm Registration
2:00pm Seminar begins
4:30pm Time for informal chatting/networking

Refreshments will be provided.

Spaces are limited!
Click here to register for the seminar by Thursday, 13 June 2019.
If you have any questions, please email Liam Bluer from Mokoro (lbluer@mokoro.co.uk)

OUR SPEAKERS & CHAIR

Allison Anderson is a non-resident fellow with the Brookings Institution's Center for Universal Education, focusing on how quality education contributes to sustainable development, disaster risk reduction, and climate change adaptation and mitigation. She is also an adjunct professor on Critical Challenges and Opportunities in Education in Emergencies through to Recovery at Columbia University's School of International and Public Affairs (SIPA). Allison is working with Mokoro on the evaluation of UNICEF's support to education in humanitarian settings and is team leader for the Nepal country case study.

Hiba Salem is a PhD student in her final year at Selwyn College, University of Cambridge. After witnessing the devastating impacts of war on Syrian children, Hiba left her home in Damascus in 2014 to pursue doctoral studies in Educational Research, where her interests lie in education within contexts of forced migration, with a focus on social cohesion and Syrian refugee students' experiences in Jordan. Her PhD research explores Syrian refugee students' perceptions and experiences in order to examine the concept of wellbeing in Jordan's segregated double-shift schools. Her publications include a policy paper discussing her findings and a literature review mapping the challenges adolescent girls face in conflict-affected settings.

Marie Tamagnan is an experienced Education Specialist with global experience in Education in Emergencies and Development particularly in developing and implementing programmes, programme management and technical expertise. Marie's focus lies in school leadership and management, school financing, teacher professional development, gender, and quality assurance in global humanitarian and development contexts. Marie previously worked for the World Bank in Latin America and the Caribbean, the Middle East, West Africa and East Africa in technical and operational education programming. More recently Marie has been with Save the Children as a Humanitarian Education Advisor and recently returned from several months in Mozambique as the Lead Education Programme Manager for Save the Children following Cyclones Idai and Kenneth.

Muriel Visser (Chair) is one of Mokoro's Principal Consultants. Muriel grew up in Mozambique, and worked there for 11 years during and after the war, mainly in the field of adult literacy, teacher education and training, and HIV prevention. Muriel completed her PhD in 2004 (Florida State University) and since then has been working as an international consultant, leading research and evaluations of development and humanitarian efforts across a range of settings and countries, and in particular in education, gender, health and nutrition. Muriel is currently team leader for the global evaluation of UNICEF's support to education in humanitarian settings. In addition to her consultancy work Muriel is an active contributor to the work of the Learning Development Institute (a virtual network of professionals with a different view on learning).

